At the end of this time the mouth opens and closes quickly, the nostrils dilate and contract. During this time, although the irritation of the cornea has caused a slight winking, neither whistling ir the ear nor touching the tongue or nostrils with ammonia or cologue has been able to produce any effect. The opening and closing of the mouth re-sembles yawning, and are reproduced a dozen times, after which the motions gradually cease. Then the cornea loses its sensibility to the touch, though, half a minute having elapsed, the yawning is still active. The pupil of the eye dilates at the approach of light, but it does not contract, and the corner loses its glistening appearance. No experimenter has been able to de elds whether the movements specified were involuntary or attended with some slight action of the will. No dog ever responded by special movements to these efforts to excite his senses. All perception of external objects has entirely disappeared at the moment of de-capitation, as far as the observers have been able to determine, and the movements have come, or appeared to come, from the prolonged activity of the ner-wous centers. Dr. Loye obtained preeisely the same manifestations from dogs that he had plunged into a state of complete anasthesis. There seems, then, no reason to believe that any sort of consciousness connected with the action of the will exists in the head of the person who has been guillotined, beheaded with the ax, or effectually hanged, which will not prevent the prejudice or the superstition to continu and have its effect on certain minds for long ages to come. -San Francis
